

Meet Shannon Hader:

5th generation Washingtonian. Life-saving doctor. Progressive problem solver.

A fifth-generation Washingtonian raised on her great-grandfather's Auburn farmland, Shannon wanted the skills and opportunity to make a difference. She found them as a doctor combating deadly disease. Now she's ready to make a difference for the home that launched her success.

The daughter of a Boeing retiree and Korean War veteran father and a mother who taught dance and art at community and senior centers, Shannon has traveled the country and the world in the pursuit of improving health and quality of life. She graduated from Auburn High School and went on to Stanford University, becoming the first of her nuclear family to graduate from a four-year university. She earned her medical degree from Columbia University, completed a residency in medicine and pediatrics at Duke University Medical Center and an infectious diseases fellowship at Emory University.

Shannon is proud of the education she received. She wants to make sure today's generation of young Washingtonians benefits from the same opportunities: strong public schools, affordable college, and good jobs that support a family.

Armed with that world-class education, Shannon joined the Commissioned Corps of the U.S. Public Health Service as an Epidemic Intelligence Service Officer, later serving in Atlanta, Zimbabwe, and Washington, DC.

Most recently, Shannon was the Director of the Division of Global HIV & TB at the United States Centers for Disease Control (CDC) and Prevention. She led a team of nearly 2,000 people across 45 countries, responsible for an annual budget of approximately $2.4 billion. As part of the President's Emergency Plan for AIDS Relief (PEPFAR), Shannon and her team drove quality up and costs down, while directly supporting more than 6.5 million people on life-saving HIV treatment and contributing to the nearly 2 million babies who have been born HIV-free.

Now, Shannon runs for Congress in Washington's 8th district to make sure the government is working for her home community.

Both parties are targeting WA-08.

Shannon Hader is the progressive who takes on tough fights – and wins.

We're at a turning point— send a progressive leader to Congress to stand up to Trump.
